No Union, No Worries? No Way!

Historically, the National Labor Relations Board ("NLRB") has been a government agency to which non-unionized employers have paid little attention. In the past several years however, the NLRB has pursued an aggressive anti-employer agenda that has included the non-unionized workplace as a primary target. It is critical that all employers understand the NLRB's new rules, which reinterpret and enforce the National Labor Relations Act ("NLRA"). Employers should adopt lawful and effective compliance strategies in an effort to remain non-union and avoid the cost and expense of litigation. This program will focus on key initiatives of the NLRB that primarily affect all non-unionized employers - from small businesses and non-profits to large manufacturers - and suggest best practices for staying out of the NLRB's crosshairs.
